

NATIONALIST DVU VICTORY IN GERMANY

THE GERMAN GERMAN PEOPLES UNION (DVU) scored a stunning triumph at the end of last month in regional elections in the old East Germany. The regional elections in the state of Saxony-Anhalt saw the DVU take 12.9% of the poll, coming from nowhere to take many seats in the eastern länder legislature and shake the political establishment in Bonn to its core.

The DVU, headed by multi-millionaire Dr. Gerhard Frey scored the highest vote for nationalism since the war and firmly set the agenda for the Bavarian länder elections and the national elections later this year.

The vote came after a £1 million campaign aimed at young voters by way of mail shots and posters. The weekend before elections saw Magdeburg covered in posters by the DVU. Saxony-Anhalt faces 25% unemployment—double the rate in the west—with all of the old manufacturing industries having closed down after unification made them uncompetitive. Chancellor Kohl's promise of 100,000 jobs in the east were seen as so much hot air. Additionally, there is widespread scepticism about the euro. All of the establishment parties support the euro, thus the stand by the DVU for the Deutschmark and against the euro struck a chord.

Analysis shows that the DVU took 25% of the vote amongst the 18-24 age group and 17% of those aged 25-34, making the DVU the biggest party amongst young voters.

The ruling Christian Democratic Union of Chancellor Kohl saw its vote fall by 12.5% to 23% and its liberal Free Democrat partners failed to cross the 5% threshold for elected office. Also failing to cross the threshold were the Greens—the leftist coalition partner. The opposition Social Democratic Party increased its vote by 2% to 37%, and the Party of Democratic Socialism—the re-named Communist Party of the old East Germany took 20% of the vote (unchanged from last time) with the same anti-euro stance as the DVU.

Rene Fischer, 36, who lost his job last year summed up the feeling best when he said: "I voted DVU because they best represent my interests. They have the right answers. they'll fight for jobs for Germans. All the other parties won't. The others only care about the euro."

With the DVU and the communists alone campaigning against the euro and taking a third of the vote, the German elections in September should be interesting.

ELECTION TIME

The council elections this month show, as predicted, that it is still too early for any gains to be made against Labour by the BNP. Teflon Tony, the man to whom nothing seems to stick continues to ride high.

Minor gains were made by various parties in this election but these were chiefly at the expense of the Liberal Democrats. Labour's position remained broadly unchanged.

The story on page one on the nationalist DVU shows what can be achieved — given the right circumstances. High unemployment and a deeply unpopular government out of touch with the people can lead to spectacular victories.

Here in Britain, the BNP confirmed that its hat is still very much in the ring with a spate of good results, along with, invariably, others that were not so good. Most results this time were down on 1994, but 1994 represented an historic high for the party on the back of the, then, recent council by-election win in Millwall.

The turnout was also low at 34% which meant that voter apathy led to smaller votes than otherwise might have been had.

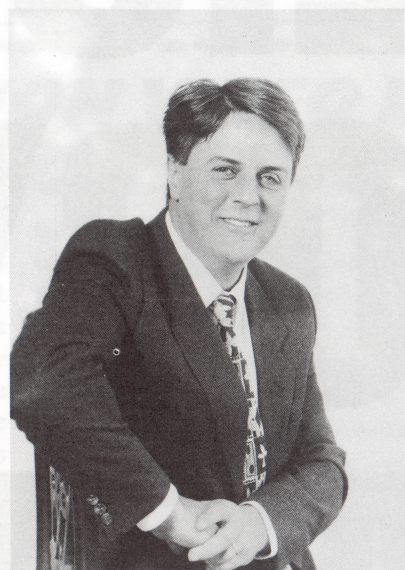

The Newham votes were particularly good. They were good in terms of seats contested and also in terms of votes obtained. Elsewhere good votes were obtained in Millwall, Hackney, Chapel End, Merton and Illingworth. Some of these were first time votes. Beckton with 23% was the party's best vote, although a clutch of votes at around 16-18% shows that there is breadth to the party's appeal — it is not just confined to a single ward.

As forecast, the party's next breakthrough will come in a by-election. Good votes over the last year in Yorkshire indicate that such a breakthrough may not necessarily occur in London. To some extent, the party will have to wait for 'Tory' Blair to slip up.

In the meantime, while the party awaits more favourable circumstances to marshal a winning vote, the next task ahead is the Euro-Elections. The herculean effort needed for this is strictly to push out the party's message and to recruit the members needed to make the party stronger — ready to assist in making the party's next electoral breakthrough.

BNP BATTLE FOR FREE SPEECH — Carlile Two walk free in Rune Race Case

The long awaited Rune Race case finally started and concluded late last month, starting on Monday 27th April in Harrow Crown Court, north west London. The case originated when ex-Lib-Dem MP Alex Carlile complained that The Rune magazine broke the notoriously oppressive Race Relations Act. Part of his crazed complaint was that a picture of a beautiful Viking girl looking out to sea at a Viking longboat was a metaphor for contemporary Britain and sending immigrants back home. In the event, the prosecution chose not to rely upon this! Day One opened with Nick Griffin making legal arguments and getting the multi-racial jury sworn in.

A key point in this legal debate was the fact that the prosecution had applied for, and been granted, the right to withhold the initial letter of complaint about the magazine sent by Carlile to the police. Although such unused background material is normally released to the defence upon request, in this case the Crown Prosecution Service had ignored letters demanding such documents, before hiding behind the claim that the letter contained 'sensitive' material.

Despite Nick Griffin pointing out that the Attorney General's Guidelines on the disclosure of unused material make it quite clear that he was entitled to see the letter, the judge ruled to the contrary, saying that the material was 'irrelevant' to his defence. This decision may be connected to another observation made by Judge Copley who, on Mr. Griffin's contention that the entire prosecution was politically motivated, said: "That may very well be the case, but that is irrelevant."

The prosecution case took little more than an hour on Tuesday morning, opening with the claim that the magazine was "a blatant example of incitement to racial hatred."

Absurdly, the Crown contended that even to discuss the problem of the below replacement level white birthrate and the use of such terms as 'white survival' was an indication of racial hatred towards others.

It was at this stage that the jury heard the entire one-and-three-quarter hour tape of the interview between Nick Griffin and two police officers. As the complaints raised by Carlile were systematically demolished, it began to dawn on one and all that Nick was not to go without a fight.

The increasingly confident defendant struck another body blow when he complained to the judge that the transcript of the interview which the jury also had, contained a number of inaccuracies which undermined the impact of what he had said. The prosecuting barrister leapt to her feet to say that this didn't matter but was slapped down by the judge who agreed that the transcript should be corrected. Point by point, therefore, Nick was able to read through telling soundbites giving the jury time to write in the proper version and think on it. Then, having established the precedent, he sprung his trap and the judge ordered the jurors to amend their trial transcripts to have the interviewing police officer admit that the complaint against him was politically motivated.

The remaining hour-and-a-half of Tuesday afternoon was taken up by the first part of Nick's own defence, in which he examined each of the specific things objected to by the prosecution. He showed, for example, how the caption to a picture of an illegal Jamaican immigrant who had shot dead an unarmed police officer was far more moderate in tone than the coverage of the incident in the national press, and a highlight of this part of the case, came when Mr. Griffin dealt with the allegation that a reference to 'the sword of war' in an article about the Vikings was "a call to arms for white supremacists." Having described the phrase as 'mere rhetoric', Nick recited the whole second verse of William Blake's Jerusalem, raising an extra finger every time he came to a piece of violent imagery. "Bring me my bow...etc." At the end of the verse, holding aloft no fewer than seven

RUNE TRIAL GIVES PARTY GOOD PUBLICITY

Last month's Rune race case gave the party one significant piece of publicity relating to Nick Griffin's surprise Black witness. Black activists aiding the party and sharing the party's racial platform (although from a complimentary Black perspective) is both newsworthy and opinion forming. The media generated image of BNP members as race-haters, while incorrect, has gained credence through the stupid and juvenile antics of others close to the wider nationalist movement. Few people among the general public would wish to associate themselves with such hate-filled rubbish and rightly so.

For the BNP, winning hearts and minds is crucial to success. The story first put out by Black newspaper, New Nation and taken up by the Sunday Telegraph (below) shows that it is possible for the party to change its image to reflect the reality, not the racist stereotype. Eighteen months ago, the party mounted a small demonstration with a Black family who wished to emigrate to Guyana but for whom the Home Office would not pay their fares, let alone resettlement costs. This story was carried in The Guardian as well as by The Voice, Britain's other black newspaper.

The point of both of these stories is that it is possible for the party to change its negative image. It might be a slow process and it might not be easy, but it's something that has to be done to pave the way for a wider political breakthrough.

It is worth stating that the BNP is not a white supremacist organisation. Rather, the BNP is a racial nationalist party which believes in Britain for the British, which is to say racial separation. As such, the BNP believes in a homeland for all. Britain is our racial homeland. Black and Asian people should have their homelands too. They have them overseas in Africa, Asia and the Caribbean which is where the BNP wishes them to return — aided by generous resettlement grants and with foreign aid directed at countries like Jamaica and Bangladesh to make those countries more attractive to settle in.

It has nothing to do with race hate. Just as parents love their children, so we love our own people. And just as that doesn't mean that those parents hate other children, so nationalists don't hate other peoples either. Rather our nationalism makes us better appreciate and understand the national aspirations of others.

Black leaders fly in to help racist activist

A BRITISH National Party leader escaped with a suspended sentence for inciting racial hatred after two American black-rights campaigners flew to Britain to act as character witnesses for him.

Chief Elder Osiris Akkebala and his assistant, Kwame Akkebala, of the Pan Africanist International Movement, are campaigners for racial separation who believe all black people should eventually go 'home' to Africa — although their headquarters are at present in Florida.

They were flown to Britain at the expense of the British National Party so they could give evidence on behalf of Nick Griffin, who had published racist material.

Kwame Akkebala said yesterday: "We would work with Satan if it meant furthering the cause of racial separation and, to that end, we meet with all sorts of people, including neo-Nazis and members of Ku Klux Klan."

"We believe in racial separation, just like Nick Griffin. Therefore we share a lot of common ground and we see

by PAUL GEORGE and ROSS SLATER

Nick and his colleagues as doing a similar job to us. Nick is a very polite man and we work with him whenever there is a clear mutual benefit to be gained."

Osiris Akkebala, who always wears traditional African robes, and Griffin, 38, have been friends since the black nationalist visited Britain in the mid-1980s to discuss with leading lights of the National Front ways of achieving racial separation.

Since then the two have kept in contact and Akkebala describes Griffin, who has since joined the BNP, as a "spiritual brother". During the 1992 general election he was even persuaded by Griffin to endorse one of the BNP's candidates.

Many anti-racists have expressed astonishment at the behaviour of the black activists, who have continued to support the BNP despite the party frequently being accused of racism.

Kwame Akkebala said: "We do not find any of their material offensive."

Griffin was charged after police seized 360 copies of his magazine, the Rune, which contained, among others, an article referring to "immoral slaves". But last week in court Chief Elder Akkebala said Griffin had never displayed any racist behaviour towards him.

Despite the Chief's testimony the jury found Griffin guilty of inciting racial hatred. He was given a nine-month suspended sentence and ordered to pay £2,300 costs.

Akkebala's group and the BNP are very keen to work closely in the near future. Kwame Akkebala said he and the Chief Elder hoped to come to the UK later this year to stage a conference alongside British extreme right-wing activists on racial separation.

He said: "It would be wonderful to get all the white and black separatists from around Britain together under one roof."

"It would be a great opportunity for us to tell the black people of Britain that we need to come together and eventually go back home to Africa, which is where all black people truly belong."

Single thought: Nick Griffin, left, was found guilty of inciting racial hatred despite the testimony of Osiris Akkebala, right

How the Sunday Telegraph reported the separatist aspect of the BNP's philosophy: Every nation needs an exclusive homeland — including British whites! This is not a question of race hate, but of racial and cultural survival. From love of our own kind, we can understand and respect the national aspirations of others.

fingers, he asked the jury to consider how much more 'violent' this much loved hymn is than the piece of poetry to which the prosecution had drawn their attention.

Nick's evidence continued for another hour-and-a-half on Wednesday morning, with more telling blows being struck against the prosecution's case. Nick read out aloud articles from a number of mainstream publications, including The Guardian and Time magazine all of which substantiated his, at first sight, unlikely claim that white people are an endangered species. His subsequent cross-examination turned out to be a ding-dong battle, during which the judge waded in on the side of the prosecution.

More judicial bias was apparent when the next defence witness took the stand. World famous historian Professor Robert Faurisson, who was called to show the jury that Mr. Griffin's apparently unorthodox opinions on certain aspects of the history of the Second World War were in fact based on fact. The prosecution argued that such evidence was inadmissible, pointing out that, under the repressive and unjust Race Laws, "the truth is no defence." Nick accepted that this is the 'law', but argued that he was not seeking to introduce Professor Faurisson's evidence on that basis, but in order to make the jury understand that he had genuine reasons for his heretical scepticism, thereby proving that he was not making things up in order to incite hatred.

Even operating under the tightest possible restrictions, Professor

Professor Robert Faurisson

Faurisson's charm and rapier-sharp wit ensured that he was able to get his key points across. At one stage, when he had asked for five minutes in which to sum up the revisionist view of what did and did not happen during the Nazi persecution of Jews in Eastern Europe the judge was sternly shaking his head. Nick Griffin interjected: "Your Honour, just five minutes?" But again, the bewigged head indicated 'no'. "Three minutes", chimed in the Professor, raising a finger as if to catch the attention of an audience. Everyone laughed, including the judge. "I give you the time that remains until half past three", he said nodding towards the clock. Two-and-a-half minutes!

The Professor immediately launched into a brilliant potted lesson in real history, finishing on the dot of 3.30p.m. As he did so, he looked at the clock and commented simply. "Just in time." The whole court erupted with laughter, whereupon the Professor managed to continue his history lesson for a good ten minutes more.

The prosecutor unwisely tried to cross-examine the Professor on his convictions in France for thinking forbidden thoughts. Had he not already admitted to ten or twelve such offences?

"Twelve, maybe fifteen. Your Honour, you have before you a terrible criminal," twinkled the Professor. "It's not often we hear a witness in Harrow Crown Court admitting to being a terrible criminal", laughed the judge making it quite clear that he regarded the elderly French gentleman as anything but.

On Thursday, the rather more sympathetic judge heard former BNP Press Officer, Michael Newland testify that he had never heard anyone in the BNP leadership advocate the use of violence, and that anyone who had done so would have been regarded as either being mad or working for the state. He also gave some powerful examples of how lying newspapers had worked to create a climate of hatred against the BNP, and to give it a false image as a party of 'race-haters'.

He was followed by Colin Smith, whose evidence centred on the ground-breaking joint demonstration between the BNP and Rastafarian Archie O'Brien, whose pleas for financial assistance to resettle his family in Guyana had been ignored by the Home Office. The British Nationalist report of the demonstration was entered as an official Exhibit, and jurors were given a copy to read for themselves.

As Nick's final witness walked to the box, looks of pure astonishment appeared on the faces of the jurors. African-American separatist Osiris Akkebala swept into court in full tribal robes to essentially, give a character reference for Nick and to explain his philosophy, using almost identical words to express his views about the need for Black identity and survival as Nick had earlier used in connection with the white people of Britain. Mr. Akkebala, Chief Elder of the Pan African International Movement, scotched the idea that this was 'hatred' and pointed out that racial separatists are motivated solely by love of their own kind, not by hostility to anyone else.

As with each of the other witnesses that morning, Miss Wass declined to ask Mr. Akkebala any questions. Despite her reputation for courtroom aggression and her confident start earlier in the week, she clearly knew that she was out of her depth. Once again, the judge exchanged jokes and smiles with the witness, clearly enjoying what had become a most unusual case.

With the defence case over, Thursday afternoon saw the prosecution's closing speech. The Rune, claimed Miss Wass, was a very subtle publication. The racial hatred in it could only be found by reading between the lines, by looking for deeply hidden meanings. She also commented that Mr. Griffin was a very articulate man, who was trying to: "pull the wool over your eyes."

Nick began his own closing speech by pointing out the extent to which the prosecution had suddenly changed its view of the magazine. "On Monday it was 'blatant incitement', but now it's 'subtle', with 'deeply hidden meanings'." He told the jury that this was one example of how it was in fact the prosecution which was trying to 'pull the wool over your eyes.' Nick went through the charge against him word by word, explaining how the defence evidence had demolished the prosecution allegations at each point.

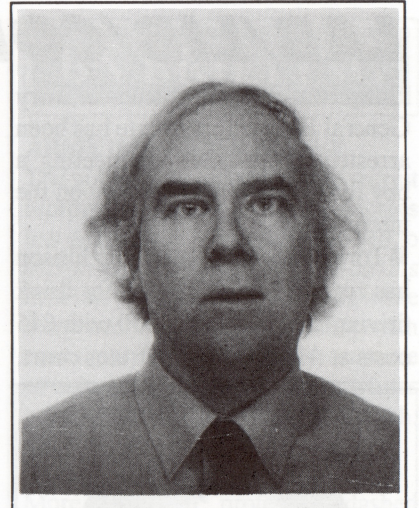

In his summation on Friday morning, Judge Copley reminded the jury that the prosecution hadn't even attempted to portray the magazine as 'threatening' and he went on to give an extremely fair account of the trial and the evidence presented. His entire speech seemed designed to tell the jury to acquit. This remarkable turnaround is the clearest indication possible of Nick Griffin's skilful and dignified courtroom manner, and the quality of his witnesses. As the jury was sent to begin its deliberations, many of the supporters of free speech in the public gallery dared to believe that even this jury might acquit him.

Unfortunately, neither these factors, nor the judge's comments, had any impact on the jury. In fact, a local party member has since heard that one of the jurors was telling neighbours during Nick's case that: "we're going to get him." Clearly there were a couple of its members who put up some resistance to this injustice, for it took the jury some three-and-a-half hours to reach a unanimous verdict. This was announced with obvious relish by the polytechnic Marxist type who had got himself elected as foreman: "Guilty."

At this point, Nick was joined in the dock by Paul Ballard, who had pleaded guilty at an earlier hearing in order to save his elderly and unwell mother from the strain of a contested case. The judge then delivered his verdict. Significantly, there was none of the usual condemnation of what the defendants had done. Instead, he merely pointed out that they had been found guilty of what is regarded as a serious offence. He accepted that the material had nothing in common with the incitements to violence which more often come before the courts under this law, and he acknowledged that the defendants' beliefs were sincere and that their intentions were good.

Nevertheless, he went on, the minimum sentences he could impose were of nine and six months imprisonment, with Paul Ballard getting the lower figure for his guilty plea. In addition, Nick Griffin would have to pay £2,300 costs, and Paul £300. Then, just as the faces in the public gallery were at their glumest, came another dramatic turnaround. Judge Peter Copley went on to say that the exceptional circumstances of the defendants — looking after a young family (in Nick's case) and an elderly lady (in Paul's) minded him, without setting a precedent for sentencing in any other cases brought under this law, to suspend the sentences for two years. The sigh of relief from the public gallery was audible across the whole court.

Then, suddenly, having been warned to be very careful in future, Nick and Paul were walking out of the dock and shaking hands with their supporters, including the members of the most professional and well organised defence team ever put together in a British Race Law case. Despite the perverse verdict, everybody there knew who had really won. A resounding moral victory for the BNP, free speech and in particular, Nick Griffin.

Highlights of the trial is over, the tape of highlights of Nick Griffin's interview with the police after his arrest is once again on sale. Copies of this unique, professionally-copied cassette are available for a minimum donation of £7, made payable to 'Publicity for Freedom' and sent to: The Secretary, PO Box 14, Welshpool, Powys SY21 OWE. While many people have been extremely generous throughout the case, the combination of legal research, flights, and accommodation for witnesses, security arrangements and the like has also been very expensive. Any readers with spare funds are therefore urged to send as much as possible to help towards the substantial costs bill and to make an appeal affordable. Initial legal advice is that Nick Griffin has good grounds for such a move which, if successful, would give him back his clean record, the right to stand in elections and complete a smashing victory over the forces of repression. Please do what you can to help.

Sir,
please find enclosed an advert by Leicester City Council for a Pest Control Technician. One of the requirements is the 'ability to speak an Asian language'. Job seekers should not be disheartened. Maybe they would like to become a Markets Officer instead? Sorry, is knowledge of an Asian language is also required!

Or maybe they aspire to greater things such as a Principal Personnel Manager? The advert states: 'applications are particularly encouraged from Black people/Minority ethnic communities' which roughly translates to: 'Whitey, don't waste your time on this form'. Nevertheless, all is not lost! An aspiring job seeker could always become a Park Ranger. However, one must have 'an understanding of the needs of park users giving particular attention to disabled people, women, ethnic groups and children'.

with reference to the enclosed press clipping, the predominantly Asian Darnall area is notorious for this kind of attack. Only the intervention of the Sheffield BNP Organiser saved a motorist from a beating at the hands of a similar gang two years ago.

Sir,
I have no hesitation in subscribing to the British Nationalist Party. I know immigration is by far our most important policy, but I have nevertheless been most impressed by our other standpoints on the National Health Service, Law and Order and saying NO to Europe to name but a few. I therefore enclose my membership fee. Keep up the excellent work.

Sir,
With regard to April's front cover on ethnic cleansing, a comparison could be made with the indigenous red squirrel and the invading grey. One hundred years ago or so, this country was populated 100 per cent by reds. The grey was imported and rapidly outnumbered the red. First in parks (the ghettos) followed by the rest of the country. It was allowed to run amok (positive discrimination) and the reds were completely cleansed out apart from isolated or protected areas. It is interesting to note that whereas the greys are regarded as vermin, the red is considered a valued native species.

R. Truman, Rhyl.

Sir,
At a party meeting in Coventry recently, one of our members questioned the wisdom of contesting the Euro Elections next year saying that we should get more involved in council elections. Personally, I believe that this is a good route forward except that we suffer a lack of candidates. To improve our position in the shortest available time and to reach the greatest numbers of people in the shortest available time, I believe that standing in the Euro Elections next year is the best solution on offer. Last year we reached millions, received thousands of enquiries and gained hundreds of new members. Next year, we can reach even more people with a popular anti-EU message that will not be taken up by the establishment sell-outs and thus win even more support than ever before. The party's Euro Election initiative is thus an important stepping stone on the road to power.

Regarding the recent interest in paedophiles. As far as we're concerned, child sex perverts should be locked away for a very long time and those who have killed should be dispatched from this world to the next on the grounds that children are the most precious beings on earth.

CORRECTION

In the March edition of BN, several mistakes were made in respect of an article concerning an armed robbery. BN ran the story on the basis of a partial news clipping... and got it wrong! The 'partial' referred to an robber called Appiah. Also shown was a photo of ex-Mayor Kofi Appiah. The reasonable assumption that they were one and the same was incorrect, for which BN apologises unreservedly. The robber, Magnus Appiah was in fact the son of the former Lib-Dem Mayor of Tower Hamlets and not the ex-Mayor himself. Unfortunately, nowhere was this apparent in the 'partial'.

CARLTON TV - MEDIA LIARS

The Independent Television Commission is to launch an enquiry into a Carlton TV documentary following allegations from The Guardian newspaper that a drugs documentary was faked. The drugs courier, it is claimed, was a paid actor, the camera shot of him leaving South America for a plane to London was false — he stayed in Bogota to pass out the packages he had swallowed, the heroin was nothing more than crushed mints, the secret film location in London was in fact the hotel bedroom of the documentary's director. The whole thing, says The Guardian was faked.

Carlton TV was the company which last year in its Cook Report programme attempted to lure the BNP's Nick Griffin into illegality by offering large sums of money. While no charges against Carlton have been brought for either inducement or entrapment (or are likely to be), it remains true that Carlton are gaining a most squalid reputation as liars, fakers and entrapment artists. As an ITC probe is underway, Mr. Griffin is also to raise his own case.

As an Englishman living in Yugoslavia, about 100 miles from Kosovo, I had a wry smile at a BBC World Service report that Bradford schools are approaching the point where half their schools are Muslim. In Kosovo not many years ago, the Serbs outnumbered the Albanian Muslims, but the vastly greater birth rate of the latter has created a huge Muslim majority.

It is probable that in 30 to 40 years, Bradford will become 90% Muslim. Will the Muslim population then demand an autonomous province or will it be content to live under the Christian traditions and British laws of the 10% minority?

What would be the British reaction if a foreign minister from Yugoslavia travelled to London to warn the government that it must talk to the ethnic population and grant them autonomy, and the Americans warned that they would impose sanctions on Britain if it failed to comply?

I had nothing better to do than watch clips of the Easter Sunday service on TV beamed from Canterbury Cathedral. I was ill and my mind wasn't working. That's probably why I didn't think anything of it when a group of gay rights protesters suddenly invaded the church, took over the pulpit and accused George Carey of being homophobic.

It was only when security men came along and started taking the protesters away that I realised that this wasn't part of the Christian celebrations. Personally, I think it's outrageous.

The leader of the gay group is Peter Tatchell, the man who shoved the old and frankly feeble Archbishop out of his pulpit and started shouting his slogans. If Tatchell was serious, and wanted to show his anger, he would have gone down to Hyde Park Mosque during Eid and started to have a go at Eastern Eye.

My attack on human rights legislation is based on the notion that I think it wise to prevent one set of people forcing their values on another even if those values are identical to the ones I hold. The key point is this: a liberal society is one in which the state is prevented from making laws that discriminate against certain citizens whether on the basis of class race, gender, sexual orientation or anything else. An illiberal society is one where the state forces individuals to accept certain values in their private lives, such as what standards they must use in deciding who they employ, house or promote.

Currently, a 'human right' is nothing more than a policy objective by the state's bureaucracy, the phoney name given to whatever policy goal is blowing in the wind... We have become so conditioned to the illiberal society that we unconsciously use existing restrictions of the state to justify further restrictions. This is the most insidious aspect of human rights legislation.

BRITISH ADVENTURER COMPLETES GRAND SLAM

David Hempleman-Adams is one of a breed of Britons that has all but been forgotten.

Stirring tales of Britain's almost forgotten heroes are all but forgotten as books about them have gone out of print. A nation which doesn't know its own history is so much easier to mould than one proud of its traditions and conscious of its history.

So it was that when Hempleman-Adams completed his trek to the north pole to win acclaim for a feat stretching over eighteen years — to have climbed the highest mountains on each of seven continents (including Antarctica and Australasia) and reach both the geographic and magnetic north and south poles — it was as if a stranger had suddenly burst upon the national stage to say hello. The achievement is an outstanding one, and while some may think it all pretty pointless, it shows that the hardy British spirit is still alive and burning brightly. The spirit that, even now, could be set free to make this country great once again. To recreate a whole industrial base to make Britain self sufficient once more, to provide Britain with jobs and wealth once more. A prosperous, free and independent Britain is still possible given the government unleashing Britain's natural creative energies. Britain will have to wait a while longer yet, but the BNP is coming!

Britain can still produce the rugged adventurers and heroes that discovered continents, created the biggest empire the world has ever seen and who spread civilisation to the four corners of the earth. British Nationalist salutes David Hempleman-Adams!

Quote

"The only thing that finishes a politician is quitting. Being in what your enemies call disgrace doesn't finish you... Even when you're down and bleeding and being kicked in the nuts, you have to get up and fight back."

Richard Nixon.

BN BRIEFING

ARMY IMMIGRANT DRIVE

The politically correct drive to recruit more immigrants into the armed forces has gone badly wrong and has led to recruitment dropping by 15% on this time last year. The reason? Young white army recruits need to identify with country and flag, need to have a sense of belonging. Patriotic young whites won't fight for a multi-cult mish mash.

RITUAL SLAUGHTER

More than 50 protesters dashed between several Essex farms to prevent dozens of sheep having their throats slashed in halal ritual slaughter for the Muslim Eid-el-Kebir festival. The RSPCA condemned the practice as "barbaric".

Narendra Makanji, the former Anti-Racist Alliance co-Chair (along with Ken Livingstone) and which went bust last year, is being sued by Islington Council over being landed with a large bill from solicitors acting on instruction from... lefty doyen Ken Livingstone.

UK DUMPED ON BY EU

Britain's European 'partners', Belgium and France are expelling hundreds of 'asylum seekers' and packing them off on Euro-Star to London Waterloo. Unlike aircraft airlines there are, at present, no penalty surcharges able to be levied by government on this carrier for carrying aliens without the correct papers.

REPATRIATION FILE

Greece is arresting and expelling Albanians in an effort to cut crime and passify Greek public anger at the abuses committed by foreigners. The government has promised more army patrols along the border and an extra 1,400 police patrolling city streets. 166 immigrants have already been expelled within the first week.

Youngsters say no to Europe

An opinion poll commissioned by the race-mixing Runnymede Trust in conjunction with the Commission for Racial Equality found that a majority of young people (61%) see themselves as British and not as European, rarely or never identifying themselves as European. Europhiles have greeted the data with dismay. Lorraine Cushnie, 18, said it was only natural to feel British and not European.

"I see myself as British. I hardly ever think of myself as European at all."

British Countryman

FOR TRADITION, IDENTITY AND FREEDOM

THE 'SILENT MAJORITY' FINDS ITS VOICE AGAIN!

"MIDDLE BRITAIN" is waking up! We're sick of decades of being ignored, insulted, lied to and red tape and seeing our own country in the grip of the European Central Bank. Now Labour's attacks on country sports, on farmers, on the green belt, on cottage hospitals and on our children's right to a traditional education are just the final straw. Middle Britain has had enough of being quiet, enough of being polite and enough of being ignored. We're through with asking, we're organising to DEMAND a fair deal for country people and country traditions. Middle Britain demands action!

THE TED BUDDEN COLUMN

THE GREAT HUSTLE

It makes me angry when I read of glib confidence tricksters cheating honest people out of their life savings. So it made me even angrier when con-men stole the birthright of the people of Northern Ireland. The spectacle of Bertie Ahern's and Tony Blair's shifty eyes aglow with triumph after their 'success' in the N. Ireland 'peace process' was a nasty experience that I found quite vomit-worthy. They resembled nothing quite so much as a pair of dodgy used car salesmen who had just sold a gullible client a clapped-out old banger as a genuine vintage car.

For they had indeed sold poor David Trimble a pup. From the moment that he and the Ulster Unionists agreed to take part in the 'peace process', it was inevitable that he would either have to cobble together some shoddy agreement or be blamed as the man whose intransigence had destroyed the hopes of millions.

For Tony Blair with his philosophy of 'hitting the ground running' and 'keeping up the momentum', speed is of the essence — if the quickness of the hand is to deceive the eye.

So it was hustle, hustle, hustle all the way. First, Mitchell (a US citizen) declared that he would either have to procrastinate (i.e. discussion) and that he was setting a deadline for the conclusion of the talks. Irish Prime Minister Ahern insisted that he would make no more concessions — though what concessions a foreigner could make in a province of the United Kingdom is not clear. Finally Tony Blair weighed in with his assertion that this was positively the last chance for peace and that he would join in to keep up the momentum while the drivelling

N. Ireland Secretary Mo Mowlam added to the hype by asserting that a solution was in sight if they "gave peace a chance".

And so the surrender document was signed. British troops in Northern Ireland will be 'reduced to peacetime levels'. The Royal Ulster Constabulary is to be reconstituted to be more terrorist-friendly. The Irish Government will attempt to change the Irish constitution in order to ensure that it will only take over Ulster with 'the consent of the majority'. How kind!

They are no doubt confident that demographic changes will bring that majority in due course since Catholic families tend to be larger than Protestant ones and no doubt the IRA, still armed to the teeth, are equally confident that they have ways of making people consent.

Incredibly, what hasn't been addressed is the question of what constitutes a majority. Constitutional changes usually require a two thirds majority. Under this projected agreement the required majority would seem to be one. Quite apart from the 'nationalist' tradition of voting early and voting often, what is going to happen when the two factions approach parity in numbers? This is a recipe not for peace but bloody civil war.

But it was not all bad news. John Hume, the emotional leader of the SDLP, informed us breathlessly that Tony Blair had personally rung Bill Clinton of his great success and that the great man was delighted. As a special treat the Lord of the Universe, he of the sleazy zipper, would personally visit N. Ireland, after the referendum, to grant it his benediction.

So the people of N. Ireland will be bombarded with opinion polls showing enormous majorities in favour of the deal and the Government propaganda machine will go into operation full blast.

Darling Paddy Ashdown and William Hague will go to Ulster to stand shoulder to shoulder with Tony and tell the people that this is the only deal on offer and that there is no alternative.

But of course there is and always has been. The terrorists should be told that N. Ireland is an integral part of the United Kingdom just as it has always been and that any British citizen who doesn't wish to be a British citizen is at liberty to leave, just as they have always been. They should be told that terrorists will be hunted down and killed wherever they hide. But that is not a solution that appeals to Paddy, little Willie or Tony.

WHAT IS IT FOR?

Mr Newt Gingrich, the Speaker of the American House of Representatives, has a suggestion for us. He has recommended that Britain pull out of the European Community and join the North American Free Trade Area. One does not need to be an admirer of the EC to find this proposal quite bizarre, almost as bizarre as the Daily Telegraph's enthusiastic support for the proposal, but then the Telegraph's proprietor, Conrad Black, is North American!

In the referendum of Britain's membership of what was then the Common Market, those of us who opposed invariably cited the danger of Britain becoming merely an off-shore island of continental Europe. We would certainly be an off-shore island of North America — about three thousand miles off-shore in fact. Furthermore, the workers in Canada and the USA are not at all enamoured with NAFTA for they have seen their previously well-paid jobs disappear down Mexico way where the peons are happy to work for a tenth of the pay, while they find the jobs that are open to them are low-paid ones filling shelves in supermarkets or flipping burgers at McDonalds — very much like us, in fact.

Forty years ago, I worked for a machine tool company called Kearney and Trecker in Brighton. One day all the employees were taken to the company's assembly plant to see the company's pride and joy in operation. It was a milling machine operated by punched tape and we watched in amazement as it cut intricate shapes in a metal block without any human intervention. It was years ahead of the rest of the world. Today that company has ceased to exist; its last job being to fit electronics to lathes made in India. Brighton and Hove, with a combined population of 250,000, once employed around 12,000 people in engineering and had an industrial estate built specifically for engineering. Today that estate houses a supermarket and warehouses for imported goods and the number employed in engineering is almost certainly less than a thousand. All of which explains why Britain, once the workshop of the world, became last year for the first time in its history, a net importer of engineering products.

And of course all those vaunted foreign investors in Britain are increasingly becoming outvestors. Mitsubishi is closing its TV factory near Edinburgh because it says it can't make money in Britain. The American car maker General Motors has told its employees at Vauxhall that they'd better be prepared to take a low wage increase or the company may be forced to relocate elsewhere. Meanwhile the politicians tell us that we must be prepared to be "flexible" since we are just part of the global village and that we must compete in the global economy. They might have added: "Brothers, we're all coolies now."

Which brings me back to the EC. Those of us who opposed membership and lost out, thought that there might be a consolation prize in that a single market would protect us from cheap foreign imports made by coolies. It hasn't. I'm sure that we, the fourth poorest member of the EC but the second biggest contributor to its budget, didn't join because it gave us the opportunity to subsidise Ireland and Greece in the style to which they've become accustomed. So I think we are entitled to ask what the EC is for if it is not to protect European jobs and European racial integrity. Precisely what the hell is it for?

NEW BNP LEAFLETS

All these children would be alive today if our spineless politicians had the guts to declare war on the paedophiles

Clockwise from top left: Susan Maxwell, Caroline Hogg, Sarah Harper, Sophie Hook, David Hendry and Karen Griffin. The killers of all these children were either known or convicted paedophiles — like dozens of other child-killers. How many more must die before something is done? Only when we lock away the perverts who prey on our children, removing them from society completely, will our streets and playgrounds be safe again. And for paedophiles who kill their victims, the only just punishment is the rope!

MEDIA DYNAMITE!

Two new party leaflets have been drawn up to capture public support using a different style of leaflet to that used in the past. These two new leaflets are 2-sided A4 in one colour and to help promote distribution as much as possible, the party has obtained a special printing deal to keep prices very low!

The issue of paedophilia or child molesters to give them their common name is big news around the country. Sex beasts are being routinely 'outed' and demonstrations are occurring against them. This is the leaflet to set the topic alight and give any BNP branch almost

THEME-PARK BRITAIN

How 'politically correct' townies are killing our country

ANOTHER farmhouse lies derelict, either to fall down or to become a yuppie weekend cottage. Yet another family swallowed up in the city, while more and more farms every year are taken over by City speculators, while village schools, pubs and shops become holiday homes. Rural Britain has been systematically neglected and depopulated by a system based on city 'values' and short-term greed. What has this got to do with Field Sports? Everything!

Our masters in Westminster and the media have forgotten that a healthy countryside is the backbone of a nation. Their only concern is to preserve a few pretty bits as a summer theme park and tourist trap. The idea of a rural Britain which stands on its own feet, which has its own industries, traditions and sports actually frightens our urban masters, because it doesn't need them. They need our taxes, but rural Britain doesn't need the parasites in parliament, Whitehall and the TV studios. But people who don't need their 'help' make these power-junkies uneasy. That's why they love the 'under-privileged, multi-racial inner-cities', and it's why they hate the real people of rural Britain.

That's the real reason for their attack on country sports. Animal 'welfare' doesn't come into it. If it did, they'd do something about the scandal of ritual and kosher slaughter, whereby hundreds of thousands of animals every year are slowly bled to death without any pre-stunning. In ways which would land any other slaughterman in prison. But the Labour Party and most 'animal welfare' fanatics turn a blind eye to this 'religious' savagery, just as they ignore the huge numbers of lambs taken by foxes and badgers. After all, cuddly foxes are politically correct, whereas native Britons, and our traditions and livelihoods don't count. We only built this country, we only pay the taxes — so we don't count!

As a matter of fact, the masters of urbanised Britain don't give a damn about foxes either. If they did, they wouldn't be so keen to condemn them to slow death by poison, habitat-destruction and gangrene from bullet wounds (where are they going to find 'marksmen' in a country where they've outlawed target shooting?). What they really care about is destroying our identity, our sense of belonging, our nationhood. To hundreds of thousands of Britons, their sense of identity is intricately bound up with hunting or other field sports — that's why they're the latest target.

That's also why weather forecasters don't use temperatures which actually mean something any more. That's why you can't buy pre-packed potatoes by the pound any more. That's why the county regiments have been amalgamated out of existence. That's why our kids come home from school knowing more about 'colonial exploitation' in Africa than about our own history. That's why TV soaps portray homosexual perversion as acceptable, even preferable. That's why our cities (because British people there are targets too) have been filled with hideous tower blocks and with strangers from every part of the globe. That's why our political and economic freedoms are being submerged in a European super-state. That's why they won't leave anything alone.

What we are facing is the organised destruction of our identity and freedoms by an out-of-touch but immensely powerful political and media élite. It can only be stopped, let alone reversed, when large numbers of ordinary Britons unite and organise to resist and reverse the process — when we British organise to take back control of our own country. That's the purpose of the British National Party.

guaranteed publicity with the party's strong, yet popular stance of advocating capital punishment for the sex monsters.

The other new A4 leaflet offered is the new Countryside leaflet, looked at in August BN, and which is more appropriate for rural areas since it is aimed at country folk. In this leaflet, the point is made that the country folk are under attack just as are the townies.

The party spells out its policies to regenerate the countryside, provide jobs and maintain the rural way of life.

Both leaflets are price £10 per thousand with postal charges of £6.40/1,000 and £8.55/2,000.

Because of the 'hassle-free' nature of both of these leaflets they are particularly suitable for isolated individuals who wish to leaflet their communities and get the word out where it may never have been heard before.

To assist that, prices on smaller quantities are as follows: £5.00/500 plus £5.15 p&p; £2.50/250 plus £2.50 p&p; £1.00/100 plus 95p p&p.

NEW AUDIO TAPE

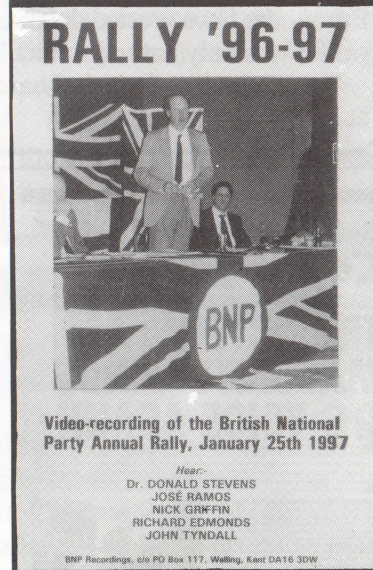

The first of a new series of audio-tapes produced by the British National Party. It consists of two recorded studio talks by BNP Chairman John Tyndall. These are: The BNP: a movement for the new century — an exposition of the main BNP policies; and Time For Action! — a summons to the lazy and apathetic to stir themselves and get involved. £6.00 plus 36p p&p.

BLACK COUNTRY BNP HOLD INAUGURAL MEETING

Following the defection of the West Midlands region of the National Democrats to the BNP, the West Midlands Nat-Dems have been reformed as the Black Country branch of the BNP. This area covers Tipton, Dudley, Wolverhampton and West Bromwich.

The meeting heard Steve, Andy and Sharron Edwards, as well as former BNP press officer, Mike Newland speak to the ex-Nat-Dem people there along with several observers from South and West

Birmingham.

Mike Newland said that the way forward for nationalist politics in this country is to take a more political approach and to articulate the problems of the country together with their solutions in ways which the people will find appealing. It is all very much common sense, he said.

Andy Edwards spoke of the plans the new Black Country branch has for the forthcoming year. This is, essentially, to explain to former Nat-Dem supporters why the ex-Nat-Dems have crossed to the BNP and why they should also transfer their support too.

Additionally, the new BNP branch has to get the name known as widely as possible and this will involve a lot of work.

The new Black Country branch is one of the most welcome turn of events for the party for some time and BN is sure that it will prove successful. The new Black Country Branch can be reached at: PO. Box 1241, Tipton DY4 9YR

MEETING IN DEWSBURY

It was standing room only as over 80 guests crammed into the plush venue for the Sunday Club Spring gathering. Guest speakers were old favourites Nick Griffin and Richard Edmonds and the affair was made more colourful by the new branch banners.

Nick gave a detailed rundown on what is needed for the BNP to take power, while Richard both entertained and enthused those present with the will to win.

Blood & Honour concert aids BNP

Last month saw a heartening display of unity when Coventry & Warwicks BNP hosted a BNP benefit gig played at by Avalon, Conquest and Razors Edge from the Blood & Honour music organisation.

Just over 100 saw the bands perform with all the entrance money being donated (after band expenses) to the party's Euro-election fund.

First on were Avalon performing both their own songs including the excellent Our Honour is true as well as several Screwdriver covers. Next up were the surprisingly good Conquest. The surprise is that this good band has yet to record an album.

Last on were veteran white resistance group,

Razors Edge who played a powerful set including jobs not immigrants.

The total raised for the euro-election fund after expenses, which also included a blown amp [damn! — Ed], was a little over £300.

Thanks are due to Mark, the Coventry Organiser who worked hard to organise the concert, to the bands who played, and of course to all the people who turned up to make it a success. Unity!

ELECTION VIDEO '98

This outstanding propaganda video was put out in three of the party's best seats for this May's council elections. The local media and opposition were appalled at this video initiative as they recognised what a powerful propaganda medium it is. Euro Election '99 Fund

The BNP is making an appeal for £50,000 for the European elections next year. This is the amount needed centrally, regionally and locally together to contest the Euro elections in sufficient strength to win TV broadcasting time and take the party's election address to 12 million voters — the biggest nationalist push than at any time since 1979. The party remains, of course, resolutely opposed to the EU. Because the fund has to raise its £50,000 target by next March, that means the party has to raise £1,000 per week. Locally and nationally it is possible. But for that to happen, you need to give, to give generously, to give often and to give now. The total raised last month was £3494. BN would like to thank all those that stumped up. This is a very good monthly total, but an even bigger effort is needed next month to make up for a poor figure in March. If the party's ambitious target is to be reached, everyone must examine their conscience and their wallet — it's time to give now! Following last month's experiment in printing donors initials together with city/county, the party has decided to cease printing these since a number of donors clearly prefer total anonymity. Please make all contributions payable to 'British National Party' and send to:

BNP ELECTION VIDEO INITIATIVE: MISSION ACCOMPLISHED!

The party's big election idea — a video delivered to selected addresses from the electoral register went according to plan with 300 videos going out in each of what the party considered its best wards. Vote topping Millwall and Beckton were among them along with St. James ward, which party leaders also considered a good bet before the election.

Typically, BNP opponents panicked as the party's unexpected and enterprising initiative caught them unawares. Labour MP for Bethnal Green & Bow, Oona King said that she would be taking her 'concerns' about the party's campaigning tactics to the Home Secretary Jack Straw!

Feedback from the video suggests that it acted, essentially, as a remote canvassing tool. Video footage contained the party's General Election broadcast from last year along with locally shot footage aimed specifically at the East End. In addition, the video had several advantages: firstly, it was quicker popping these through letter boxes than actually speaking to people — although getting away from personal contact is probably not a good thing; secondly, voters could watch it at their own leisure without feeling 'hassled'; thirdly, the voter could either pass the video on to friends or neighbours, or alternatively invite them in to watch it as an informal video evening (and we know this happened); fourthly, the voter was exposed in a passive way to the most powerful propaganda medium known to man — the television; fifthly, the video couldn't talk back thus avoiding awkward questions!

There is definite evidence that voters were swayed by the video. voters who were not going to vote BNP did so as a result of watching the video.

However, it is also known that the party did not reach its maximum potential audience. It had been hoped that between one-half and two-thirds of the white electorate might see the video before the election. Unfortunately, the video went out too late. The lesson here is live and learn! Next time, any video will need at least three weeks, not the 3-8 days that it actually got. Readers wanting to buy the video see p6.

Fury as BNP launch video for votes bid

THE British National Party are vowing to blitz the Isle of Dogs with hundreds of election videos in a bid to win votes on May 7.

BY ANNA MAINWARING

Don't back the racists call to the East End

Church leaders are hoping to counteract the message by distributing leaflets to households across the borough featuring a white West Ham United player and a black player celebrating victory together.

FACE HATE

She told the Advertiser: "A vote for the BNP is nothing more than a vote for the backward-looking race-hate which people in the East End fought against, and paid with their lives to prevent, 50 years ago."

SCRUTINISED

BNP candidate Dave Hill said the videos cost 34p each to produce and that the party had kept within its strict election spending limits.

He added: "It's basically an appeal to the voter and it's very much what you get when we canvass voters."

"They are not what they pretend to be. They are not

Clipping from the East London Advertiser. This article, along with an election day smear associating the party with the kkk was written by Anna Mainwaring. Anna is the daughter of sitting Labour councillor for Millwall Julia Mainwaring. What a surprise!

What we stand for

- The establishment of a government of national unity that will put an end to nationally divisive party warfare; the return of leadership and statesmanship to British affairs.
- An end to immigration and a start to repatriation.
- British withdrawal from the European Community: trade with Europe where it suits us but no political ties.
- The disbanding of the multi-racial Commonwealth and its replacement by a new Commonwealth of self-governing white states.
- British ownership and control of British industry and resources.
- Protection of British industry by the selective exclusion of foreign manufactured goods from the British market.
- An end to the financial swindle that causes inflation and slump, and its replacement by a sane and fair financial system that will give the people the purchasing power to buy the goods they produce.
- The subordination of the power of the City to the power of Government, and the harnessing of the City to the needs of British industry.
- The regeneration of British farming, with the object of achieving the maximum self-sufficiency in food; also the restoration of the fishing industry by protection of our traditional fishing grounds.
- A healthy environment for a healthy people — the protection of our countryside and an end to the architectural disfigurement of our towns and cities.
- Tougher treatment of criminals, including the return of the death penalty.
- A return to traditional methods of education, with stronger discipline in the classroom and the sacking of 'trendy' teachers.
- An alternative defence strategy: withdrawal from NATO; closure of all foreign military and air bases in Britain; British withdrawal from the war in former Yugoslavia, where no British interest is at stake; the bringing home of British forces from Germany; the strengthening of Britain's defences and a position of armed neutrality.
- An end to overseas aid and the allocation of the money saved to the financing of repatriation and greater help for the needy at home.
- The crushing of the IRA, the termination of the Anglo-Irish agreement and firm support for the loyalist majority in Northern Ireland.
- A return to healthy moral values aimed at strengthening the family and community.
